

Dissalaria baloghoides (Lancewood)

Uncommon tree. Grows in dry rainforest along moist scrubby watercourses. New growth is pink. Flowers are perfumed, small, creamy-brown, in branched stalks. Fruit is a hairy, yellow-brown splitting capsule about 10mm in diameter ripe from June-December. Not edible. This tree has very hard wood and was used by Aborigines (as the common name suggests) for spear construction.

Type: Tree to 15+m
Aspect: Full Sun/Part Shade
Soil: Adaptable
Habitat: Dry
Sclerophyll/Riverine

Special features:

- Attracts –
 - Birds
- Fragrant Flowers